

Waihopai Valley, Marlborough, New Zealand

Situated in the Waihopai Valley of Marlborough, New Zealand, Leefield Station is a magical place where the drive, tenacity and vision of its owners, past and present have created a remarkable working farm and vineyard.

Today, while vineyards line the valley of Marlborough, pockets of sheep and beef farming can still be seen, along with a few fruitful orchards and beehives. Leefield Station, under the care of the Marris family, brings all of these important elements together with a mission to showcase the best of Marlborough in one amazing property.

Multiple varieties of delicious grapes, plus well-kept sheep, cattle, and pigs – all alongside flourishing native bush sheltering productive beehives and teeming flora and fauna. It is nature co-existing perfectly – helping each other, thriving together, in an amazing eco-system of its own. This is what modern farming looks like.

"I see Leefield Station as an integrated vineyard and farm park, a real icon of the district that becomes a showcase property for Marlborough and New Zealand" – Brent Marris

An Iconic Symbol of Marlborough

Born of the Waihopai Valley, The Ned represents the vibrant diversity that is so prevalent in the Marlborough wine-growing region. One of Marlborough's famous peaks, The Ned mountain served as the playground for Marisco founder, Brent Marris, during his youth. The ethos "Young At Heart" encapsulates this wine; a true expression of grassroots winemaking that places the energy and liveliness of adventure in every bottle.
